Valentina Hopkins has always been a dutiful daughter. Her parents intend to make good use of her obedience by marrying her off to Lord Edward Neville, the indebted son of the Earl of Dorchester. The Hopkins' are very rich, but not part of the aristocracy; the Nevilles are blue-blooded and titled, but woefully in debt. It seems like the perfect match: Hopkins money will get the Nevilles out of debt and buy entrance into society for George Hopkins, Valentina's brother, who very much wants to take his place among the swells of the ton. But the marriage to Edward Neville, might be more of a death sentence than an opportunity for Valentina. After all, she is strangely drawn to the family's rebellious younger brother Christopher.
