He looked at her lying there, bloody and limp. “Cut the cord,” she moaned. “Cut the goddam cord!” In 2011 Category 5 tropical cyclone ‘Yasi’ ripped across far North Queensland, destroying homes and leaving thousands without power and water, cut off by washed out roads and deadly fallen powerlines.

These are the tales born—not of the cyclone—but of the fevered imaginations of writers; isolated, unwashed and suffering in the tropical heat without our beloved air-conditioning. Here in the tropics insidious monsters heave themselves onto muddy banks, housewives grapple with man-sized pythons and unprepared tourists face death on dusty, life outback roads.

Buckle down for 18 stories and 13 poems from the wet, wild and rugged Far North Queensland’s best poets and writers.
