Although Tara Redwood never wanted to move, she comes to love her new home with the help of a crazy cast of friends and lots of horses. This story weaves a tale of how a young girl makes a place for herself in the tight-knit polo world through genuine friendships, hard work and a special way with horses. When author Ceanna Gates was a young child she loved horses above all else. She spent hours playing among her legions of small molded horses, and slept at night cradled among horse stuffed-animals. Her toddling days were happiest when wandering the barns and paddocks. As a 10 year old homeschooler on Maui she applied her remarkable determination to creating opportunities to spend meaningful time with horses. She was interested in more than just learning to ride, she wanted to have a deep connection with these animals she loved. Through flyers and word-of-mouth she canvassed her neighborhood and eventually landed a mucking job at a nearby barn. The owners had nine polo ponies and were in need of much help mucking! Three days a week, rain or shine, she mucked and mucked. The owners became great friends and mentors in horsemanship and they eventually gifted her her first horse, Velvet. This novel was inspired by her experiences.
