The final claxon sounded as Alex Black threw the severed head of the last retired apprentice out of the hotel window in a rage. Lucinda Millhaven sat on the ground, blood surged freely from the large gash that flowed like a river from her left eye to the corner of her mouth.

Her once perfect face was now deformed and pain erupted in her head. Her blood soaked hands were frantically trying to pull the assassin's blade from her groin as her life force pumped out of her body onto the floor. She fought hard to stay awake and cried out for Alex Black but her words seemed to get stuck in her throat and she passed out. Lucinda awoke in the hospital wing of the Killing Grounds and desperately searched for her love but she was alone, and as the realisation that he was gone settled within her a black cloud swallowed her soul. She let herself sink into a deep depression and refused to heal herself. But fate always has other plans, there are evils stalking the streets of the city and highly skilled Artists waiting for their opportunity to destroy Millhaven House and everyone that lives inside its walls. It's time for her to make a decision; roll over and die or come out fighting! And three words haunt her every dream, words that she heard every day when she was a child, words that would bring her more pain than she had ever had to endure...Family comes first!
