Dree of Torl has no idea how to be anything other than a sex slave.

But now, the only life she knows destroyed by war, Dree is a free woman. She doesn't have to be with a man if she doesn't want him. Dree can make her own decisions. Marc Torin has never met a woman like Dree. A strong leader, he rules his land with a fair hand but knows how to give orders. But there is something about Dree that brings him to his knees.

The desire to conquer her, to learn her secrets, make her part of him, invades his senses and fills his thoughts. But there is a separate battle to be fought for each of them. They find there is a price to freedom, and sometimes, an advantage in letting it go. At the end of the day, Marc and Dree learn that becoming one is what truly makes both of them free.
