“Descent” is book #3 in the Systemic series. It’s been nearly six months since the deadliest pandemic the planet has ever known decimated the world’s population.

John Stevens has discovered that it’s not the virus that has proved most dangerous to him and his family though, but the people it left behind. Having escaped the Chicagoland area only to be pushed farther south by the territorial demands of other survivors, John and his family are desperate to find some semblance of the world they once knew.

So when they stumble across a small farm in rural Georgia, inhabited by a contentedly quiet farmer and his welcoming wife, they are pleasantly surprised to learn that not everyone left on the planet has become law renegades. But not all is as it seems at this peaceful homestead. Oh, and by the way; guess who else is back? Yep...Jake and Ava. They’re on the prowl, and like John and his family, looking for a place to settle down, but with much different intentions in mind. About the Author: K.W. Callahan left his role in the hospitality industry to pursue a career in writing. Since then, he has written books on a variety of subjects as well as penned articles for numerous print and online publications. Before his work on the Systemic series, K.W.

authored several other novels that include: The M.O.D Files: The Guest Who Stayed Over, a murder mystery set within the confines of a landmark Chicago hotel, and Palos Heights, a suspense thriller that follows four college students on a weekend bike trip that takes a dark and deadly turn.
