Malvina Raven returned to New Zealand determined to vanquish the ghosts in her family's past—a past filled with terror, murder, and madness that even now stalked her with terrible nightmares that left her trembling in her bed. Surely now that she was a woman grown she would be able to walk the empty rooms and winding halls of Ravensfall without fear. But Ravensfall was not empty at all. Malvina's cousins Clinton and Lucy lived there now, along with Devlin Fordyke, a handsome, brooding American who was renting one of the estate cottages. And none of them seemed at all happy to see her.

Sudden silences greeted her when she entered a room: her every move was regarded with cold suspicion. She began to suffer paralyzing sleepiness and eerie delusions that soon had her doubting her sanity. Then she discovered the laudanum, and Malvina knew the truth. Someone was trying to scare her away from her childhood home...someone who knew far too much about the ghosts of Ravensfall for Malvina's own good!
